

This year, I had a conversation with the wife of a mission president who knew I had several children attending BYU-Hawaii. She asked if I could assist some of her Returned Missionaries in navigating the application process for BYU-Hawaii, aiming to help them secure an education that could improve their economic status. These hardworking young adults lacked the resources and mentorship available to them in their home countries. Having previously helped many young adults apply to BYU-Hawaii, I agreed to assist.

